

OPEN LETTER 3 TO THE GOETHEANUM, ELIANT, AND ASSOCIATED ANTHROPOSOPHICAL ORGANIZATIONS REGARDING THE FORMULA “TOGETHER”

With this third text, I am moving from critical open letters to critical open letters in the form of philippics. These address the relationship between contemporary institutional anthroposophy, European structures, and broader social and political processes.

At the center of this analysis is the formula “Together”—an apparently harmless message of unity and cooperation that takes on particular significance in the context of ELIANT’s activities and the organization’s connection with the Goetheanum. The question I raise goes beyond the boundaries of ordinary institutional partnership: what does the inclusion of anthroposophical initiatives within the structures of the European Union mean, and what consequences might it have for the autonomy of the anthroposophical impulse?

I also examine this question in its spiritual dimension. If the Goetheanum is regarded as the institutional representative of anthroposophy and its spiritual foundations, then its relationship with the European political project cannot be assessed solely as a matter of organizational cooperation. A more fundamental question also arises: the possible spiritual legitimation of political goals and actions through the authority of anthroposophical institutions.

I publish this analysis in the conviction that open dialogue, critical inquiry, and freedom of judgment are necessary conditions for preserving the spiritual autonomy of anthroposophy and for taking a responsible approach to its future social mission:
